

ABSTRACT

The invention relates to the use of a variety of computational methods for generating enzyme-like protein catalysts. Specifically, computational methods are used to insert active site domains, including catalytic domains and binding domains, into a protein scaffold and optimize surrounding amino acids for interaction with the active site domain.